Public House. Early c1935. Tudor style. Ashlar plinth, buff and beige brick in Flemish bond with handmade clay tile roof. Symmetrical butterfly plan addressing the corner of Ash and Brighton Road comprising central 2-storey range and flanking single storey ranges with parapets. Flat roofed brick extension to rear. Massive brick stacks project from the front roof slope to the central range and similar stacks to the gable ends of each flanking range. Chimney stacks are tapering in stages and have double octagonal shafts with tile shoulders. To the central range there is faux timber-framing to the first floor with central gable and jetty. Tile hanging to gables of central range, flanking ranges have raised verges with coping stones. Large 'Tudor-style' four-centred arch doorways. Metal casement 'crittall' type windows with leaded lights, those to the ground floor with ashlar surrounds. Cast iron rainwater goods. A fine example of the public house type from the 1930s period and replacing one of the earliest public houses on Aldershot which pre-dated the camps.
