Historical Context:

Buildings current use as Paddy Power, a bookmaker. The building dates from the late 1850's; an early Victorian addition to the town centre. From 1859-1904 it was used as the offices of Aldershot Local Government, which then became the Urban District Council in 1894 and continued to be located here until 1904, when they moved to the new Town Hall. The building is an important example of early Victorian Aldershot and retains many of its original features externally. It forms a central place in the local history of Aldershot's local government and development of the Council.

Complies to two Criteria;

Criteria B: The building or structure dates from between 1840 and 1914 and has a definite quality and character.

Criteria I: The building or structure has special local (for example: Rushmoor military or aviation history) or national historical associations.
